Reconstruction of the «Armenian» Text

in the Russian Poetry of the XX Century (Computer Research Experience)

The article describes a study on the reconstruction of the so-called «Armenian» text in Russian poetry. Russian folklore and ancient Russian literature have already mentioned Armenian literary portrait that was finally formed in Russian literature only in the XX century, after the tragic events in the history of Armenia in 1915. Through applying the software complex «Hypertext search for companion-words in author's texts» to the representative corpus of the Russian language poems on the Armenian theme (65 works of different poets), lexemes marking the minimal themes of the «Armenian» text have been identified. These lexemes act as dominant components of the «Armenian» lexical combinations presented in the poems of Russian poets («Ararat», «Yerevan», «mountain», «sky», «ground», «blood», «heart», «soul», «flame», «eternal») and optional ones («hostile», «to rot», «myopic», «book», «child», «Komitas», etc.). The common lexical combinations will allow the authors to establish intertextual links, which form the basis of the «Armenian» text in Russian poetry. However, in most cases poems have no intertextual links that could signal the influence of one text on another. The coincidence of vocabulary in the texts is usually explained by geographical and historical realities, as well as a poetic tradition.

Key words: «Armenian» text; software system «Hypertext search for companion-words in author's texts»; lexical combinations; intertextual connections.

Shalott's Song: a Specific Feature Found in Balmont's Translation of A. Tennyson's Poem «The Lady of Shalott»

This academic paper is devoted to the analysis of a specific feature which could be found in K. Balmont's translation of A. Tennyson's poem «The Lady of Shalott». The aim of the work is to study the reasons why Balmont uses the word «волшебница» to describe the heroine in his translation while there is no word with such semantics in the original text. (This word is put in the name of the translated work and it is found in almost every stanza). English analogue of the word «volshebnitsa» (that is, the word «enchantress», which, according to the Oxford English Dictionary, is closest to this word in semantics), while in the original text of the poem this word is not mentioned, the neutral word «lady» is used and once (in the speech of the mower who hears the heroine singing, but does not see her) there is the word «fairy».

This article, on the one hand, summarizes existing studies on the topic; on the other hand, complements them. The study highlights and considers several reasons for the above-mentioned discrepancy between the original text and its translation: emphasizing the connection with a fairy tale, revealing a number of motifs which play an important role in the work of Balmont himself (namely, motifs of music and creativity as magic) and an indication of the main heroine's charming beauty.

Key words: K. Balmont; A. Tennyson; «The Lady of Shalott»; free translation; semantics; poetry; poetic equivalence; thematic equivalence.

«Climbing The Alps»: Symbolic Toponymy as a Factor of the Cycles Formation in I.A. Bunin's Oeuvre

The article analyzes the unassembled cycle of I.A. Bunin's three texts with the same title «In the Alps». The poem and the chronologically first short story with the same title were written at the beginning of the writer's literary career. At that time Bunin learned from outstanding predecessors in order to find his own poetic voice and place in the field of literature. The result of the searches showed the invention of a unique genre – the genre of prosaic miniature. Then, half a century after publication of the first texts «In the Alps», the third short story with the same title appeared.

The meaning of the toponym «The Alps» in the title of the short stories is explained by appealing to Bunin's memoirs and self-describing notes. The concept «The Alps» in his literary works is initiated, on the one hand, by the writer's first trip to Switzerland, and, on the other hand, by the parallel reception of the so-called «Swiss myth» in the works of European and Russian romantic poets and writers: G. G. Byron and V.A. Zhukovsky. While the motifs and imagery system of Bunin's «alpine» cycle is inherited from his predecessors, the innovations of his literary method are demonstrated in the narrative organization of the texts.

Key words: I.A. Bunin; V.A. Zhukovsky; unassembled cycle; Swiss myth; title; metatext; narratology.

Doctor Zhivago by Boris Pasternak and the Knight of Faith by Kierkegaard: Common Ground

The article deals with the intertextual relationships of the novel «Doctor Zhivago» by B. Pasternak and the treatise «Fear and Trembling» by Søren Kierkegaard. Pasternak mentioned Kierkegaard in his works and noted his great influence on modern culture. While Pasternak was working on the novel, he used the concept of chivalry, which was an allusion to Kierkegaard. In his treatise «the Knight of Faith» is a moral model that has overcome the fetters of rational thought and broken out of the temporary boundaries. S. Kierkegaard gives his description, which is directly related to the themes and motives associated with the image of Yuri Zhivago. Both Kierkegaard and Pasternak emphasize that the heroes of the high spirit merge with the human community, they cannot be distinguished from the general population with their private existences; the authors carefully contemplate the world around them, trying to penetrate into the very essence of each phenomenon, they differ in external carelessness with the utmost tension of the inner spiritual life. In their self-denial they renounce the most beloved, precious, valuable. Their love takes the form of religious veneration, and the beloved combines the temporal and the eternal, the earthly and the divine. They transfer the pain of double existence and the pain of loss into the realm of the spiritual, the creative, and the realm of memory. In the treatment of women's images in «Doctor Zhivago» Pasternak is equally focused on both Kierkegaard and Dostoevsky, between whom, in turn, there are many similarities. The common ground between the two texts proves the presence of purposeful inter-system interaction.

Key words: B. Pasternak; S. Kierkegaard; intertextual interaction; common ground; synthesizing metatext.

Methods of Communicative Intention Explication of the Phraseological Unit with Biblical Expression «Forbidden Fruit» (Diachronic Section)

The article analyzes methods of explication of the traditional and widely used stable biblical expression «forbidden fruit». The study is based on a diachronic section – from the interpretation of the biblical text to the communicative intention of dialogue participants in the media space illustrating nuclear and peripheral meanings. The analysis includes biblical texts that realize the archetypal meaning of the biblical expression «forbidden fruit» in which it is called the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The secularized interest in the kind of tree, on which forbidden fruits grew, is motivated by a realistic presentation of a sad history of the first people's fall in the Book of Genesis. Scientific hypotheses have their origins since the Middle Ages, when artists recreated the author's story of eating the forbidden fruit. For religion, the variety of the fruit is not of fundamental importance, however, visualization in the works of art has become an incentive for the further use of the biblical expression with a new semantic segment.

Modern media texts actively represent the transformation of the biblical expression «forbidden fruit» for different purposes: in advertising texts for pragmatic one, in informative, educational, ideological texts for cognitive one, in entertaining texts for communicative one, lowering the spiritual and semantic value register of the modern language. Therefore, the process of desemantization and profanization of the biblical expression results in the destruction of national stereotypes in Russian people's worldview.

Key words: anthropocentrism; nuclear and peripheral meaning; explication; archetype; media space; language profanization.

To the Issue of Differentiation between Metaphorical and Mental Images Verbalized in Emotive Prose
 (Based on the Texts of Small Emotive Prose by Ye.I. Zamyatin)

Nowadays achievements in metaphor studying make it possible to state that the nature of metaphor comprises mental and figurative features. Trying to fix the ideal, metaphor like any mental image may be expressed by means of natural language instruments. The mediate demonstration of the ideal nature makes metaphor verbalization and the one of the mental image nondescript that is aggravated by their core similarity and absence of special figures of mental images expression and taking into consideration their all principal possibilities to be verbalized. The author of the article has faced the taxonomic problem of characterization of Ye.I. Zamyatin's certain emotive prose texts according to the type of their imagery.

The literal material of Zamyatin's emotive prose discourse analyzed in the article shows practical difficulty of interpreting mental images in accordance with their nature. The study has made a parametric succession of constituents included in metaphorical and mental images notions due to the methods of contextual analysis of the natural language text, as well as self-observation as an empiric analysis of the language material, and theoretical synthesis of speech experience with further schematization. The succession is applied to the analysis of Zamyatin's texts.

The research data may be used for the interpretation and analysis of any emotive prose text since mental images are often intentionally verbalized as an expressive means and metaphorical ones.

Key words: metaphorical image; mental image; differentiation of notions; attribute; text; Ye.I. Zamyatin; narrator.

Cognitive Models and Narrative Construction

The article deals with the narrative text construction. The study thoroughly analyzes cognitive models that can become the basis of this process. Firstly, the author is studying the theory of rhetorical commonplaces. The article shows that this theory is suitable for constructing a rhetorical text, but not a narrative one. The second model discussed is the concept model. The article argues that this model is most convenient for text analysis, but not for its formation. Marvin Minsky's frame theory is analyzed in detail. It is stated that the theory of frames and individual narrative concepts, in particular those formulated by R. Barth, have much in common. It is concluded that the theory of frames can be perceived as the ontological basis of the narrative scientific description. In addition, the article briefly discusses the cognitive model by R. Quillian and R. Langacker. Their essence is to highlight the main and secondary content in the text. The possibility of using these models in the text analysis and its synthesis is proved by their conceptual similarity with G.Y. Solganik's analysis of the novel by L. Tolstoy. Special attention is paid to the theory of R. Abelson. It is argued that the proposed hierarchy of cognitive structures has a generalizing character and is adequate to the text. The article gives an example based on a local narrative figure analysis undertaken by V.V. Vinogradov. The paper indicates the possibility to describe this figure within Abelson's theory. As a result of different cognitive models and narrative concepts comparison, the article formulates the sequence of stages in the analysis and synthesis of text units found at different levels. The first stage of this sequence is the narrative figures analysis. The second one is the analysis of episodes, which are narrative figures associations. The third one is the analysis of the text plot structures. It is proposed to consider text units as realizations of cognitive structures. It is argued that the cognitive approach to the narrative provides its holistic and detailed adequate description.

Key words: text; cognitive model; text construction; rhetorical commonplaces; concept; frame; narrative; narrative figure; plot; episode.

Phonetic Characteristics of the Verbal Vocabulary in the Dystopian Novel «Fahrenheit 451» by R. Bradbury

The interaction of multi-aspect and multi-level features as well as their relations has been the subject of a number of studies in the field of quantitative linguistics. However, these studies were conducted mainly on language material. It is interesting to apply a similar analysis aimed at establishing the ratio of the parameters characterizing one of the linguistic levels to the speech. For example, this article discusses the phonetic features of the verbs used in the novel «Fahrenheit 451» by Ray Bradbury. Each of the verbs is assigned a number of phonetic characteristics (syllabic, accent, phonological ones). The relations of the declared parameters at the phonetic level are revealed due to the application of statistical methods, viz. Cole's correlation coefficient and Jaccard's similarity coefficient. The obtained data are compared with the corresponding parameters of high-frequency verbal vocabulary. As a result, it is noted that the verbs appearing in the novel, have their own characteristics in the space of phonetic features and it also shows their level of similarity with high-frequency lexical units in connection with the ratio of phonetic characteristics.

Key words: verb; phonetics; frequency groups; characteristics; inter-level relations; correlation; Cole's correlation coefficient.

Correlation of Lexical Meanings of Nomina Actionis with the Semantics of their Motivating Verbs (Based on Social and Political Texts)

*The paper deals with the issue of synchronous motivation of primary (verbal) and secondary (substantive) meanings of English nouns by lexico-semantic features of motivating verbs. The aim of the study is to identify not only positive, but also negative correlations between the semantics of the motivating verb and the derivative. The texts of socio-political orientation served as the material for the study. The result of continuous sampling demonstrates the list consisting of 385 pairs «a motivating verb – a motivated noun». The range of parameters taken into consideration includes basic parameters (lexical-semantic meanings of Nomina Actionis) and criterial parameters (lexical-semantic meanings of motivating verbs). The author has obtained a database that serves as the basis for the correlation analysis of the data. The paper presents the analysis of the statistical data obtained as the result of the correlation of semantic features revealed in energetic, ontological and informational complexes with primary and secondary meanings of Nomina Actionis. In addition, the article identifies the strongest positive and negative correlations. The data obtained help to reveal the influential mechanism of the elements included in the derivation process and can serve as a basis for further comparative analysis.*

Key words: semantic factors; derived nouns; Nomina Actionis (action noun); primary and secondary meanings; lexical and semantic features of the verb; correlation analysis; diagnostic force of influence.

To the Issue of the Heterogeneity of the Autobiographical Text (Based on Modern German)

The article is devoted to the study of the official autobiographical text in the aspect of its heterogeneity and polycoding. Despite the fact that the autobiographical text belongs to official texts that have a solid structure and an established set of stylistic features, this text type has recently found certain modifications that are an incentive for its further research. The modifications result from the egocentric nature of the text, allowing a certain «freedom» of the author in choosing diverse means of influence, which makes the text heterogeneous.

The heterogeneity is widely interpreted as a heterogeneous composition of the text and it has multiple manifestations. The text functional belonging to official autobiography is heterogeneous. Being assertive in a form, the text of the autobiography has a motivation for the action as the main pragmatic goal. The implementation of the incentive to the action is carried out by the appellative function, which has an indirect nature of implementation in the text of the autobiography. The effective implementation of the appellative function is carried out by the interaction of heterogeneous components within a single text as a whole. Such components include an official and unofficial register of communication, totality of dialogic and monologic speech forms, stylistic expressive means inherent in belles-lettres, mono-subjectivity and poly-subjectivity of presentation, polycoding as inclusion of non-linguistic signs in the text.

Key words: text type; polycoding; self-centeredness; prototype; appellative text; periphery of the class of texts; multifunctionality.

A Self-Centered Story about Yourself in the Text of Literary Autobiography

The article demonstrates the narrator's complexity in the autobiographical text of the literary biography at the basis of which egocentrism lies as a principle of this prose type construing. Layering refers both to the author and to the narrator. However, layering of the author causes a change of the narrator's point of view and its transfer to the 3-rd person's narration while layering of the narrator is caused by a temporary interval between the time of the narration and the time of the autobiographical event. Ambivalence and a poly discourse character of the autobiographical narration are determined by an ability of the speech person to create texts of different genres and various types.

Key words: memory; mnemonics; egocentrism; «I» of the narrator; author / object / subject; layering of «I»; change of the narrator's point of view; ambivalence; discourse; text type.

Semantic Groups of Swiss German Lexemes and Peculiarities of Their Word Formation

The main objective of this paper is to describe semantic diversity of nationally labeled lexemes and peculiarities of their word formation mechanisms on the example of the Swiss German language. One of the central concepts is the concept of «the national variant of the language». The article briefly describes the most important stages of literary and linguistic works on the stage of fixing and studying the basic dialect of Switzerland – Alemannic. The Dictionary of Variability of the German Language is accepted as the main source of the research material. The methodological basis comprises the method of comparative analysis, the method of component analysis, the method of continuous sampling, the method of statistical data processing. The study has confirmed the working hypothesis that the nationally marked vocabulary is manifested in all thematic blocks, but its use for naming the national cultural realities of Switzerland is the most typical case. Word-formation models, while maintaining the constancy of the word formation general methods, demonstrate a wide variability found in the quantitative filling of the component composition of compound words. For the lexemes of the suffix model, a typical postfix segmental morpheme – the suffix –li – is identified.

The future research may expand the empirical base of the language and reconstruction of fully aspectual communication model of the polycode space of Swiss German discourse.

Key words: nominal word-formation; composite; suffixation; compounding; lexicography; sociolinguistics; national variant; Swiss German.

To the Travelers' Service or True Stories about Foreigners in the Russian Province
(After the Patriotic War of 1812 until the End of the 1830s)

In the article the author mentions some modern publications on this issue in the era of Alexander I and Nicholas I in connection with the description of the travelling theme in the context of everyday life history. As an example of the Russian Province, the article considers Smolensk Governorate which was located at the crossroads of routes from Europe to the center of Russia through Baltic, Belarusian and Ukrainian Provinces. On the basis of the materials of the State Archive of the Smolensk region (GASO) from the funds of the Chancellery of Smolensk Governor, the Smolensk Oblast Duma, metric books of Roman Catholic Church in Smolensk and published memoirs (Eugene Hess' diary and E. Montulé's notes) the author of the article reconstructs foreign hotel owners' biographies (S.I. Chapa, D.K. Nolchini, V.I. Gaber), masters of carriage business (D.I. Graf, K.B. Weber), a city coachman, the owner of a coffee house (H. Podrut). All these people were united by their origin (they came from European countries) and their involvement (due to their professional activities) in servicing travelers who found themselves in the Russian Province. Life circumstances and development of their own business forced them to settle far away from their homeland; most of them became citizens of the empire, having connected themselves with Russia forever. In the article it is underlined that foreigners' involvement in «tourist business» of the considered epoch testifies not only to the benefit of their business activity, but also to the importance of the psychological factor – the very possibility of meeting with compatriots and representatives of other European countries.

Key words: travelers; journey; foreigners; foreign nationals; Russian Province; epoch of Alexander I; reign of Nicholas I.

The Russian Prisoners of War in World War I as a Humanitarian Issue

The tragedy occurred to the prisoners of war in World War I had the scale of a humanitarian disaster. Millions of people belonged to different nationalities lived under the hardest physical and psychological living conditions. The study devoted to this page of world history methodologically comprises an intersection of disciplines: it is necessary to study and comprehend mental, legal, economic, cultural aspects of the humanitarian crisis which had significant effect on the course of political processes in Europe. The article studies activities of government and public organizations involved in humanitarian assistance to the Russian prisoners of war who were in the European camps.

In this case a special role was played by a spiritual and cultural support of the compatriots in captivity. Acute «cultural hunger» in the prisoners of war camps was intended to be filled by the Russian book, which became a significant factor that impeded the prisoners' marginalization and denationalization.

The growth of nationalism in a public discourse of different countries around the world which were involved in isolation and marginalization of ethnic minorities and diasporas, their loss of national and cultural identity, customs and language make the study of the historical analogies connected with the fate of prisoners of war in World War I appropriate and of current interest. The history of preservation by the Russian people in captivity and exile their own cultural identity allows the author to predict the course of these processes at the present stage, as well as to develop state policy of support provided to compatriots abroad.

Key words: World War I; prisoners of war; humanitarian activity; charity; public organizations.

Reflection of the Russian Empire Social Policy (1861–1914) in English-American Historiography

The article analyzes English and American researchers' works which reflected the factors that influenced the formation of the state social policy of the Russian Empire in 1861–1914 and its individual aspects. It is noted that in studies on institutional history foreign scholars point to the problems in organizing the system of local government and self-government, which negatively affected the development of the social sphere. These drawbacks include the lack of institutional unity between the various branches of government and a single strategic purpose for the state development, the inability of various institutions of power to provide an effective solution to the problems of the population. These issues are indicated by A. Verner, N. Weissman, T. Pearson and others. The works of this direction contain negative or neutral assessments of the state internal policy, which included social policy. Its certain aspects have also received coverage in the studies on social history. In foreign historiography attention was paid to such problems as the development of charity in the Russian Empire and the situation of children, as and the healthcare system. For understanding the essence of the state social policy, the conclusions made by A. Lindenmeyr are of particular value. She points to gradual rationalization of assistance to the people in need as well as maintaining the general control of the state over its development. B. Gorshkov, analyzing the problem of child labor in the Russian Empire, for the first time affects the actual social policy of the state. He emphasizes that in this direction, state institutions and the public have managed to establish successful cooperation and achieve positive results.

In The Search of Lost Albertina:
the University of Königsberg Contemporary Historiography

The article explores contemporary historiography of the history of Königsberg University (Albertina), which had existed in East Prussia since 1544 until 1944. Over the course of four centuries there was an official narrative on the history of the university as a stronghold of German culture in the east of the country. After World War II the university history was mainly investigated by German historians, but after the end of the Cold War the interest in this topic increased not only in Germany, but also in other countries. The researchers are primarily focused on two periods – the early modern one (mid-16th – 17th centuries) and the end of the 19th – the first half of the 20th century. A considerable number of topics on the history of Königsberg University, which earlier were taboo or ignored for other reasons, have become a subject of academic interest in recent decades. Discussions arose about the degree of responsibility of university intellectuals for the Nazis' crimes. New biographies of historians such as Hans Rothfels or Werner Conze force a reader to form a more realistic image of Albertina in the 1930s.

The material of the university history makes it possible to reconsider the contradictory relations between the German state and Jewish communities as well as to expand understanding of the circumstances of the Jews' persecution at the beginning of the National Socialist era. The analysis of contemporary historiography shows that, with all its achievements, it retains some stereotypes dating back to the traditional narrative, primarily a lack of attention to the role of women in the university history and the importance of the university as an institution strengthening a gender order. The paper introduces a number of examples of women scholars that are not fully represented in the history of the university (Frieda Fromm-Reichmann, Sophie Brutzer, Elise Jenny Baumgartel). Moreover, the article gives a brief description of Russian historiography. Taking into account the development trends of contemporary historiography, the author considers the prospects of the research devoted to Königsberg University history.
